

National Severe Weather Warning Service

Chief Forecasters Assessment

An area of more frequent rain, sleet and snow over parts northeastern England will continue into Sunday morning introducing an increased ice risk on untreated surfaces where skies become clear until a couple of hours after dawn.

Meanwhile, a cold northeasterly flow has become established across much of Scotland with sleet and snow showers affecting areas exposed to the northeast. During Sunday morning, these showers will become more frequent over the far north of Scotland and the Northern Isles.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Snow and Ice

Valid from 03:05 on Sun, 14th Feb 2016 until 12:00 on Sun, 14th Feb 2016

Showers of sleet and snow are likely to continue during Sunday morning, leading to further accumulations of 2-5 cm of snow in places, mainly across northern and northeastern Scotland and the Pennines, with ice an additional hazard, particularly where skies clear after overnight showers.

Please be aware of the potential for difficult travelling conditions.

This warning has been updated to include a larger part of Aberdeenshire and eastern England as far south as central Lincolnshire.
